FFIEC recently released the highly-anticipated guidance titled “Supplement to Authentication in an Internet Banking Environment.” It supplements the FFIEC’s 2005 authentication guidance, reinforces that financial institutions must have a risk management framework, and provides the federal agencies’ expectations for 2011 and beyond. The FFIEC agencies have directed examiners to assess financial institutions under the Supplement’s enhanced expectations beginning January 1, 2012, so you need to prepare now for these dramatic changes.

Continued growth of electronic banking and increased threat diversity in the digital environment have resulted in higher risks for financial institutions and consumers. The Supplement clarifies regulatory expectations regarding risk assessments, accountholder authentication, layered security controls, and customer awareness/education programs. There is also an expectation that financial institutions should implement layered security appropriate for these transactions, including the capability to identify and respond to suspicious or anomalous transactions. Commercial account fraud is a large issue and the Supplement addresses the related expectations, too.
