MORTGAGE LENDING: START TO FINISH

A 2019 ONE-DAY SEMINAR!

With the passage of the Dodd-Frank Reform Act, the financial industry has and will continue to face many challenges, especially in the area of lending compliance. Many of the changes required new disclosures and imposed standards and restrictions as to the underwriting certain mortgage loans. However, that was only the start. The "second wave" of changes significantly redesigned the "early disclosures" and "final disclosures" required for mortgage loans secured by real estate. Not only have the disclosures changed, the types of mortgage loans covered have expanded greatly in that all construction loans and vacant land (unless an exemption applies) are now covered.

This one-day seminar will cover existing disclosure requirements for mortgage loans secured by real estate including the Integrated Mortgage Disclosure requirements, (TRID rules). The seminar will bring together the requirements necessary to ensure compliance for closed-end, consumer purpose real estate secured loans. This seminar specifically focuses on the disclosure process under the various lending-related regulations.

During most seminars, regulations are reviewed individually. This seminar discusses the disclosures on a timeline beginning when the customer first presents the loan request all the way through closing and after closing. The material is organized in a sequence similar to the way an institution processes a loan. Attendees leave with detailed materials, which will be a valuable reference tool.
